Muslims as well as Africans converted to Islam primarily in the West and North Africa. Even so, the population of Muslim Africans did not increase nearly as much as that of Muslims in the Middle East. Muslims in Africa tended to be concentrated in smaller geographic regions and urban areas.1 Most African Muslim converts were born into a Muslim family. The African Muslims had a more extended family and group ties than the West Africans, where the focus was on the relationship to an individual king. Muslim Africans were found throughout the continent, ranging from the north of the continent to the south. Most Muslim African were found in the central part of the continent and many did so in nearby areas, such as in Sennar, Nubia, and Lamu on the coast of the Horn of Africa. The first African Muslims The first African Muslims are often thought to be the Berbers and the Tuaregs of North Africa, but few of the earliest Arab Muslim converts were from either group, as Islamic civilization had begun in Arabia already during the lifetime of the Prophet. The first converts were Christians and Jews, as the Prophet was sent to the Middle East and North Africa to bring the message of Islam to these peoples. The first converts from North Africa were the small numbers of Jewish Berbers. The earliest converts from North Africa were from Khazaria, the area of land created by the Caliph Yazid Ibn Mu'awiyah who conquered the Sasanian Empire in the 630s after the death of the Prophet. The Jews were allowed to convert to Islam if they chose, but were also subjected to
