A: For those wanting to know what a "malware" is, here is the definition of malware from Cornell University's Anti-Malware Lab: Malware is software that is:

- Intended to harm a computer system
- Spread by a computer user or via a network
- Hidden or disguised

So to determine if a program is a malware

(from the definition above), they need to determine if the program is intended to harm a computer, is spread via a computer, and is disguised. It doesn't include things like spyware, or adware. There are many different types of malware, ranging from viruses to trojans. As the name implies, viruses are designed to infect or damage one's files or operating system. Trojans on the other hand are designed to steal your personal information, the programs you download, and so forth. The key difference is that malware is not malicious or intended to harm people. Viruses are usually installed on a computer with the intent of spreading from computer to computer, or infecting that computer and creating havoc. Trojans, on the other hand, are usually written by a programmer to steal personal information or your money. There are also viruses that have additional tricks up their sleeve. For instance, a Trojan may be created to fake as a virus and then perform the actual act it was designed to do (i.e. harvest files from your computer). Just like the word means, there is the subjective opinion of what is malware and what is not. A virus may not be malware to one and a computer infection may not be malware to another. However, these are some rules of thumb that you may use. Do You Know What You're Doing? With all of the information available to us today, is this true? Do we know what we are doing, or do we simply do it? With the internet there are so many different options that it is hard to decide what to do. Do you research and take your time to find the best option for you, or do you just buy it and wait to see if it's the right fit? Choosing the right product and making the right decision is very important if you want to be successful. Sometimes it feels like the only option left is to just do it. Buy without thinking! steering systems for vehicles. 2. Description of Related Art Steering systems for motor vehicles are widely used to steer the vehicle's wheels, or xe2x80x9cfendersxe2x80x9d. By turning the steering wheel of a vehicle, the vehicle's operator can control the vehicle's direction of travel. This is typically accomplished by moving one or more steerable wheels on the vehicle. Steering systems typically include a steering column that extends upwardly in front of a driver of the vehicle. The steering column is coupled to a steering column shaft that extends to the rear of the vehicle, where it is coupled to a steering wheel, or a steering wheel, that may be
