simlab soft torrentWaste heat represents a problem in aircraft engines. For instance, cooling fans of an engine extract air and expel hot air/hot gases to exterior of the engine causing an undesirable rise in exterior temperature. Such waste heat reduces aircraft engine efficiency. In response, a heat exchanger may be integrated into the engine to capture the waste heat for re-use. The captured waste heat may then be used to generate power or work. The heat exchanger may utilize a heat transfer fluid that circulates through the engine. The heat transfer fluid may be air or water, for instance. Multiple heat exchangers may be integrated into the engine to increase the efficiency of waste heat utilization. However, current cooling systems require an undesirably large number of heat exchangers to accommodate the waste heat generated by the engine, which is undesirable in that it adds complexity to the system.. 5, 3, -5? -3 Which is the nearest to 1? April 28, 2018 About us Global Free Press is an ever-growing, yet-still-small independent media outlet, dedicated to exposing injustice and inequality. It is held together by our common goal of exposing injustice and inequality, yet the world we live in is so different from the one we imagined, requiring new tools for new types of journalism. Read more »Comparison of amino acid transporter activity of the kidney and intestine in Saimiri sciureus. Vertebrates regulate the flow of essential amino acids across their membranes through amino acid transporters (systems y and L). This study compared the amino acid transporter activities of the kidney and intestine in a new model, Saimiri sciureus. Saimiri kidney had a higher influx of L-alanine and L-leucine than did Saimiri intestine. However, both tissues had similar influxes of the alpha-aminoisobutyric acid (AIB) and taurine analogs L-valine-2-amino-2-norbornane-carboxylic acid (L-val-NO(2)-C) and L-N(5)-(1,2,4-triazol-3-yl)cytosine (L-triazole-C), as indicated by nigericin-diffusion assays. The Na(+)-dependent L-valine-2-amino-2-norbornane-carboxylate (L-val-NO(2)-C) efflux activity was significantly lower than the L-alanine influx activity in both tissues. The Na(+)-dependent L-val-NO(2)-C efflux activity was expressed in Saimiri kidney and Saimiri intestine, whereas the Na(+)-independent activity was expressed in Saimiri kidney. The elect e79caf774b
