Dose-response studies in BALB/c mice with a new class of anticancer drugs, arylamino-esters of p-azidosalicylic acid. The new class of anticancer drugs, arylamino-esters of p-azidosalicylic acid (p-ASA) has been studied for antitumor activity in terms of dose-response relationships using a subcutaneous transplantable murine tumor, MG sarcoma. The basic compound, p-ASA, when administered subcutaneously in DMSO by a direct injection into the tumor, causes a reduction in tumor growth at doses ranging from 5 to 20 mg/kg. The duration of drug treatment needed for a significant dose-response relationship is 2 weeks. The highest active dose, i.e. 20 mg/kg, must be administered every other day during the first week of treatment for an effect in terms of tumor growth. During the second and third week of treatment, the lower doses (5 and 10 mg/kg) are effective in the treatment of the tumor, but the antitumor effect diminishes quickly after the third week, indicating that the reversal of the growth-inhibitory action 09e8f5149f
