Shortens URLs in the ad.fly service to make your links look friendly and clean. No, it doesn't shorten links in the "trusted domains" list, only in the ones you enter manually or in the results of a search.]]>urlShortener2013-10-11T20:05:00+00:00 Taking a liking to web links that are easily understood and look well organized? You'll be happy to know that the ad.fly service provides a really handy URL shortener. One of the advantages that URL Shortener has over other web services that shorten links is that it works alongside the ad.fly service and allows users to shorten their links even when they're viewing websites or blog posts through the ad.fly web interface. The interface is pretty clean and straight-forward with a minimalist design, allowing you to quickly add websites to your list. An intuitive interface lets you pick up on the dashboard quickly, since it offers all the essentials you need. Here, you can select the type of frames, select between interstitial and interstitial ads and select the domain. You can also change the frame's dimensions or color, as well as select the display options such as whether it shows a mouse or not. As soon as you start, you'll be prompted to enter the URL you'd like to shorten. The app then immediately responds by showing you an overlay for changing the text and icon, providing a decent amount of options, right from the start. You can also add a description for your shortened URLs and edit the text of your links, if you'd like. Clicking the "Save link" button afterwards will automatically generate a QR code that you can then paste to other websites and services to quickly provide a shortened link. QR codes aren't recognized on every website, but luckily this one doesn't prompt you to choose one. If you haven't added any websites to your list, you'll be able to do so after a few seconds, while there's no need to sign up for an account. Since this works with the ad.fly service, you can easily utilize it to shorten the links of any website that's included on its trusted domains list. Clicking on the clock icon next to the browser
