Conventionaly, several methods of treating a multi-component fluid by using a plurality of reactors which are arranged in parallel have been proposed. The above methods are disclosed in the following patent literatures. In the patent literature 1, a multi-component fluid is treated by a plurality of reactors in parallel with each other and, after a desired component in the multi-component fluid has been separated by a parallel reactor, a treated multi-component fluid is introduced to another reactor which is in parallel with the parallel reactor. Further, in the patent literature 2, a plurality of reactors are arranged in series in a flow path in an order of concentration. Further, in the patent literature 3, reactors of different structures are arranged at equal distances at different predetermined intervals so that the fluid is selectively separated in each
