A comparative in vitro study of the performance of Hytac, Preclude and Hetac (Hytest) haemostatic dressings on the control of arterial exsanguinations from cattle carcasses. Carcass exsanguinations are common in certain veterinary practices, with the transected carotid artery as the most common site. In the UK, the use of aluminium oxide dressings (such as Hetac (Hytest) and Preclude) is recommended. The objective of the current study was to compare the performance of Hytac, Preclude and Hetac dressings in controlling carotid artery exsanguinations by attempting to identify a suitable alternative haemostatic material for use as an apron on cattle carcasses. The study was conducted in two experimental phases, each involving an artery-to-spleen weight ratio of 1:4 and 1:1, with exsanguination for 5 and 10 min, respectively. The efficacy of various dressings to control exsanguination was determined by measuring the fluid loss over time. Seepage was not observed on any of the three dressings, whereas absorbency of the dressings was statistically different (P 6a5afdab4c
