Attempted Suicide and Stress. Stress is defined as a distinct feeling experienced when faced with a loss or threat that is too formidable to face. It has been hypothesized that stress may interact with the effects of concurrent depression, leading to increased suicide and suicidal behaviors. According to the diathesis-stress model, vulnerability factors such as co-occurring disorders, physical illness, and certain personality traits increase the risk for suicide and suicidal behaviors. Stress management has been proposed as a preventive strategy against suicide in those presenting with risk factors.
However, evidence for the efficacy of this intervention is inconclusive. The purpose of this article is to review the association between stress, suicide, and suicidal behaviors.
The model that will be discussed is the diathesis-stress model. Research is reviewed on the following topics: the association between stress and suicide, the relationship between stress, depression, and suicide, and the relationship between stress, depression, and attempted suicide. Thursday, August 26, 2013 I came across this painting when sitting in a ladies' chair in a quaint little Port Beach cafe. It was my introduction to the artist Helen Wolfsohn and her "Nenana Series". Over the years I became intrigued by Wolfsohn's work. What I discovered was that her paintings reflected her love of the Pacific Northwest and particularly the countryside of BC. "The Nenana Series celebrates the beauty and tranquility of the Canadian West

I sure do wish this particular nut could be cracked, but I know I'm not the only one. Walking the fine line: NLRP3 inflammasome and Parkinson's disease. Inflammasomes are innate immune signaling platforms that include cytosolic receptors and an associated adaptor protein, nucleotide-binding oligomerization domain containing protein 1 (NLRP1 or NALP1), that can in turn recruit and activate the inflammatory caspases, caspase-1 and caspase-11. NLRP1 inflammasomes are thought to regulate caspase-1 activity through their sequestration of pro-IL-1 $\beta$  within a multimeric compartment and promote the release of the inactive cytokine into the extracellular space. Two NLRP1 inflammasomes have been identified, NLRP1 and the recently described NLRP3. NLRP3 inflammasomes are increasingly recognized to participate in the regulation of innate immune responses. Here we review the current understanding of the role of NLRP3 in the context of the neurotoxin  $\alpha$ -synuclein, the principal constituent of Lewy Bodies associated with idiopathic Parkinson's Disease (PD), and discuss the potential therapeutic potential of the NLRP3 inflammasome. EPA issues proposal on greenhouse gases The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has released a proposal that would require the industry to cut greenhouse gas emissions from existing power plants by as much as 34 percent over the next decade.
